I am using JSON serialization for saving the structure of a web request made by my app. The app sends a series of web requests, each having a "keys" array and a "values" array. On receiving a request, I need to parse the JSON string corresponding to a web request and save it as a nested array, where the keys are the names of the nested array elements, and the values are the values in that array. Please help me in building a Java Data Structure that suits my need. Thanks in advance, Tushar. A: I figured out a solution. I am serializing the data in the following way: { "keys":["1","2","3"], "values":[["John","Smith"],["Foo","Bar"],["Name","Lastname"]] } The solution would be something along these lines: public static class Request { public List keys; public List< List> values; public String encodeRequest() { StringBuilder builder = new StringBuilder(); builder.append("{"); builder.append("keys:["); for(String key : keys) { builder.append(key); builder.append(","); } builder.append("]"); builder.append("values:[");
